Dear Mr. Schmitten,

Please help us protect our oceans and do not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

As a 4th generation Californian, I have had the good fortune to have enjoyed swimming in and sailing upon our lovely coastal waters. Now headlines warn of mercury poisoning in our fish, contamination on beaches, and increases in "mysterious" sea life deaths..with many washing ashore. I dream of a state that is returned to its pristine natural beauty..one that my grandchildren and their children may enjoy as I have. With this in mind, I urge you to protect essential fish habitat

Our oceans are already under threat from massive pollution, global warming and over-fishing. We must conserve them or the climate of the world will become such that our earth will no longer be habitable. At present things are bad enough to interfere with people's enjoyment and harvesting of its food sources. We do not need for things to get worse.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I grew up in the San Francisco Bay Area with a love for the bay and ocean and all of the beautiful flora and fauna that inhabit them. However, I notice more and more that the area is becoming polluted. It is even recommended that people not swim in the Bay because of pollution. Therefore, I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. If the places that our ocean life depend on are not protected soon, it will be too late to turn the tide in favor of recovery - species will be lost forever, causing the breakdown of the food chains that we depend on for part of our existence. The people that are working to convince you that our oceans need less protection are wrong!! They are only worried about the size of their bank accounts. Please, do not be fooled by their messages - keep strong guidelines for protecting essential habitat.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. The oceans have seen the collapse of many fisheries and it is still an open question as to whether these fisheries will ever recover. Global warming and pollution have put significant pressures on the fisheries as well. Further, habitat destruction for spawning species puts additional pressure on critical fisheries. WE can no longer tolerate additional pressures on the fisheries or important industries and a critical food source will disappear.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

We used to think that the oceans were so vast that they could never be fished out or polluted. We now know that is not the case.

The oceans must be managed as a renewable resource. Quick profits do not have a place here.

The very survival of mankind depends on our ability to show restraint.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

In fact, with the recent studies showing that over 90% of the large fish populations in the Pacific Ocean have been over-fished to near collapsing, all habitat guidelines should be strengthened and all fishing quotas within US territorial waters should be cut in half.

Do we really need all of our oceanic fisheries to collapse like those of the Grand Banks before you people realize that you have not defined or enforced any kind of a sustainable fishing guidelines for oceanic species?

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

You've seen photos of our planet from space - our Big Blue Marble. The oceans cover the majority of our planet's surface - vast expanses of water - yet human activity has actually poisoned them.

We only have ONE earth, one home planet, that we share with all other living beings. We are all interconnected & interdependent. Many scientists and many other caring, thinking individuals like me are alarmed at the thought of the direction we are taking as stewards of the Earth. In the blink of an eye, in a geologic time scale, we have multiplied ourselves so much that many do not have enough food, let alone other things we many think of as necessities.

Your job is no small part of ensuring we go in the direction of being the best earth/ocean stewards we can be. Please do whatever it takes to protect our home planet, our children, and our kindred species of all kinds.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. The health of all living creatures depends on the health of our oceans. It is tragic that, now that humans have degraded the earth for so long, we have turned to the seas as well. We need to strengthen, not weaken protection of our diminishing natural resources.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Please do not allow special interest groups to further threaten the fish populations, which are already being reduced due to over-fishing, pollution from cruise ships, etc. If this administration is able to weaken the essential fish habitat guidelines now, it will be harder in the future to make them stronger again. We need our oceans to remain vital and healthy!

Sincerely,

Ginny Herrmann

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. Recent reports by the Pew Oceans Commission and by the NOAA have shown that the ocean is struggling to keep up with the pollutants associated with human activity along our coasts. This, along with weakening of our Clean Air Act with increases in heavy metals in the air will make the situation even worse.

Please do everything you can to save fish habitat for the longterm protection of our fishing industry and the health of our oceans.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

California's coastline and related habitat are a resource in and of themselves...please consider the importance of biodiversity as well as aesthetics and character of our coastline...As I'm sure you are aware, these ecosystems already experience a tremendous ammount of impact form those activities that are allowed under present guidelines...

Any modifications to the existing guidelines ought to be carefully thought and planned out, with extensive attention given to the protection of our coastline's unique ecosystem,as well as considerations to other possible impacts (ie: social, economic, aesthetic and so on).

I have seen an alarming trend in the warnings issued to limit or avoid altogether, the consumption of fish and other sorts of seafood harvested off the coast of California due to the high concentrations of heavy metals and other pollutants. This sort of Bio-magnification ultimately ends up directly affecting you and I.

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

It is not right to weaken existing laws that protect essential fish habitat just so some businesses can make a greater profit at the expense of the environment. It is necessary to protect the natural habitat for ocean as well as freshwater species if they are going to survive and provide an income for these businesses for years to come. It will also continue to make these resources available for private citizens in the future.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

Our oceans are in dire need of a break from human activity. In my opinion, it is a tremendous shame that the oceans are in their current state due to human activity and that my generation continues to watch it decline. Now is the time to act to conserve and heal our oceans. I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. I also urge you to strengthen and expand current protections.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

I have recently been in the South China Sea where there are beautiful spots in Malaysia where habitat has not been destroyed by human interference for profit. Unfortunately, there are other once beautiful spots in Thailand that are being degraded by the development of the land that has led to habitat destruction--many spots where the coral gardens are no longer living!

These are the first indications of deep trouble, and we are in a position to keep protection of habitat and animals in the forefront. What a blessing for all of us to keep the oceans safe and beautiful for those who live there and for those who visit.

If the fish cannot exist without these habitats, then how can humans expect to continue to live healthy lives. I know that I depend on the plant life that grows in the oceans for my health as I am sure most other people do. The sea nurtures these plants which grow up to contain the nutrients that we all depend on to live healthy lives. Therefore, the importance of the oceanlife is unquestionable. Dear Mr. Schmitten,

The oceans comprise two thirds of our planet's surface, and are not just a source of food and recreation. The oceans participate in the filtering of the air we breathe, the evaporation that forms the clouds and rain. The state of scientific knowledge about the oceans is still remarkably slim. However -- it would be reckless to ignore known problems and then find out the hard way how much all life forms rely on healthy oceans.

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. These oceans are essential to our wellbeing and need to be protected if we wish to lead long healthy toxin free lives. There are still many things we do not understand about these habitats and what will happen if we destroy them. I don't believe it is worth it just to put money in somebody's pocket.

In the past months, the media has helped me to become increasingly aware of the plight of our oceans. Overfishing, and pollution to the extent that many species are no longer safely edible, spells horrendous problems for our future unless we act swiftly and with deep conviction.

Our seas and the life that they contain are precious recourses. Once lost they can never be regained.

Americans have demonstrated time and time again; through voting, through demonstrations, group and organization campaigns, and through letter writing campaigns such as this one; that we feel strongly about the environment and the wildlife of this planet.

Hello Rolland,

I'm greatly concerned about the negative anthropogenic effects we are beginning to see in our oceans. From the growth of dead zones, to coral bleaching, to rising sea temperatures, to pollution and algae blooms, it is clear human activity is having a devastating impact on the health of the oceanic eco-system.

The root of my concern over this issue comes from the economic value that our ocean's represent. If we destroy them in the pursuit of short term fortunes, we will lose the long term returns.

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I am writing today regarding the public comment period that has been proposed by the National Marine Fisheries Service, which is asking the public to comment on the protection of fish habitat.

Over the past year, I have read a number of alarming articles (covered by the BBC, published in Nature and Science, carried by the Associated Press) that our planet's oceans are in dire straits due to overfishing and habitat destruction (from a variety of causes: bottom-trawling and other destructive fishing methods, fertilizer run-off leading to 'death zones' where aquatic wildlife are suffocated to death, sewage dumping by major cruise lines and coastal areas).

The numbers are alarming: predatory fish numbers down 90% in just the last 50 years; governmental warnings to minimize or eliminate (depending on the person) intake of tuna, swordfish and other species resting on top of the ocean's food chain due to unsafe mercury levels; billions of tons of bycatch annually that is thrown back dead or dying because of indiscriminate fishing practices; coral reefs (which serve as marine sanctuaries) threatened with extinction due to pollution and rising sea temperatures.

It is clear from reading these articles by scientists and government officials that we are not doing enough to protect the oceans, let alone sustainably managing its water quality and species' habitats.

The danger is that this degradation is taking place invisibly and therefore has not commanded much attention in public or political life. This does not make the continuing destruction any less real.

I would urge you to strengthen ocean protections and not weaken existing fish habitat guidelines. Please resist commercial interests' demands to weaken existing ocean protections.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I am writing to encourage you and your organization to continue to protect essential marine habitats. The continued health of our oceans to provide food for us, and as habitat for marine species is important. Unlike on land where man's effect on the environment is more readily visible changes in the ocean induced by our activities often take a long time to become apparent. In addition we understand less about the marine environment than the land environment. I urge you to take the wise road of precaution and to maintain very strong protections for essential fish habitat, and not to weaken them at all. We all need healthy oceans for our survival and for the survival of many marine creatures. Sustainable marine harvests will only happen if we tread lightly. Please keep the guidelines as strong as they are now and work to understand their impact and strengthen them if necessary.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

As resident of California and a homeowner in Maine, I have personally seen how environmental degradation of our oceans has not only hurt general quality of life, but is endangered local fishing industries on both coasts. Increasingly high levels of pollution are reducing fishing harvests, and hurting small fishermen, who account for an insignificant portion of oceanic pollutants compared with major industries, large commercial fishing operations and cruise ship lines. I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. California's ocean no longer sustains as much life as it once did. Overfishing, habitat destruction, and cruise ship pollution have all led to an alarming decline in the health of our oceans, where marine life and delicate ecosystems are threatened.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. Many once productive fisheries are now fall far short of the fish counts necessary for commercial fishing. Weakening the current restrictions might yield a short term increase in the fish catch. Those who become accustomed to the increase will inevitably starve after the unavoidable collapse in supply.

Protecting the shallows and wetlands where young fish hatch and grow is imperative. The collapse in Alaskan fish populations is just one in a long chain of disasters. A viable long term plan to manage both the production and harvest of fish species is an absolute necessity.

We have polluted our rivers and now must spend billions to clean them up. Even the vast expanses of the salt water seas have been fouled beyond their capacity to recover unaided. Straining the ecosystem with overfishing and other forms of mismanagement is more difficult to quantify than measuring pollution content in the environment. It is just has deadly to the balance necessary to produce the bounty fisherman use to enjoy.

Sincerely,
Gregory Greer

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I am profoundly concerned about the state of our oceans. All scientific evidence points to a crisis of epic proportions in the health of our oceanic ecosystems. The massive "dead zone" in the Gulf of Mexico is just the harbinger of an epidemic of lost life, lost habitat, and lost productivity of our worlds waters. We must act now to protect the public good by resisting the pressures of special interests working to push through the Bush administration's proposals. There are many reasons to increase regulations that conserve our resources, and only one reason--greed--to weaken existing protections. Please act in good conscience on behalf of the citizens and creatures of the world. Your decision will reverberate for years to come.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

We cannot make another Earth,
we cannot make another ocean,
we cannot clone or make another whale, dolphin, jelly fish, squid or piece of seaweed.

We cannot artificially do what the oceans do for our climate.

We cannot create anything so beautiful.

Although the oceans are not ours alone--they belong to everybody--including the future, we must not destroy them. We must keep them safe, clean, the way they started out.
It is our responsibility.

Sincerely,
Julei Boswell

As a resident of California, my family and I cherish our weekly trips to the beach. We know how important the health of our oceans are to our own health. We strongly urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. So many of our fish species are unhealthy to consume due to high mercury pollution, so many other marine mammals and fish are endangered due to poor water quality. Please so not give into President Bush nd his special interest groups.

We worked long and hard to convince lawmakers that protecting the environment was critical to the country, and indeed the future of the world. They finally put laws into place to protect the oceans. Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. I have spent much time at the seashore over the years and I follow reports on the declining state of our oceans. I have become increasingly alarmed at the changes I have personally seen (eg, oil slicks, "dead zones" in coastal areas, fish and bird die-offs, development and erosion of our beaches, etc.) If we do not protect this habitat, which is two-thirds of our planet, the consequences for all of us will be disastrous. Please do not allow special interests to profit at the expense of the rest of us.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. I am especially alarmed at the discovery of significant amounts of microscopic bits of plastic in the arctic ocean, and the destruction of tuna as a cheap and plentiful source of protein due to excess mercury. Please help not only to preserve but to restore our magnificent oceans.

Sincerely,
Sandra Cross

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Disturbing the ecosystem and causing imbalance can have devastating effects on breathable oxygen, weather patterns, not to mention harming drinking water and wildlife.

Consider carefully your actions, please make choices with positive long-term results.
